

THE TERRIBLE TRUTH.

The Testimony Being Elicited in the Howard Case

Confirms the First Suspicion of Murder—Evidence in Brief.

The taking of testimony in the Howard murder trial was resumed Tuesday afternoon.

Emill Bolle was the first witness of importance for the state. He was passing the house on the morning of Nov. 20th, the date of the alleged murder, about half-past one o'clock. He saw a light in the Howard tenement and went over with his two companions, one of whom knocked for admittance. While parleying to get into the house "Liz" Howard cried "the building is on fire," and he saw a flash of light under the door. He was granted admittance by some one, and when he entered Thompson and "Liz" were in the front room. They all went back where the fire was in the second room and saw Nettie Howard sitting on the front side of the bed, her clothing on fire from head to foot, her arms above her head. The next he saw of the burning girl was in the front room. A part of this time "English Liz" was walking the floor of the front room crying "The house is on fire," and "Nettie is dying; get a doctor." After a while Thompson said, "Get out of here, you are not good, anyhow," and they left. The girl, when he and his companions left, was lying in the front room on the floor. The blanket was not put around Nettie Howard by Thompson.

Peterson and Hanning, who were companions of Bolle on that night, offered substantially the same testimony. The next witness W. H. Winslow, gave his testimony, most important in itself, in such a manner as to greatly strengthen the prosecution. The main points, however, are contained in the testimony of Bolle.

WEDNESDAY SESSION.

The taking of testimony was resumed this morning. As before, Messrs. Shields and Fekler conducted the cross-examination for the defense, while Mr. Estelle handled the examination of witnesses for the prosecution.

Wm. Voss, the architect, testified to the plot of the building where the burning took place, which he had prepared.

Marshal Cummings also testified as to the exact position of the furniture, etc., in the house where the tragedy occurred.

Constable Edgerton was called, and he testified to the position of the bed in the room of Nettie Howard.

Father O'Connor, the pastor of St. Philomena's church, was called to the stand. He testified that Officer Mike Whalen had called at his house to escort him to the residence of the burned woman, Nettie Howard. There were several persons in the room when he called. He went to the bedside of Nettie Howard and asked her how she felt. She replied that she was very badly injured, and asked the father if he thought she was going to die. He replied that she was dying. She accepted his statement with little agitation. He then took her confession. Attorney Shields closely questioned Father O'Connor and tried to get some facts from him in regard to the statement but the reverend gentleman refused to divulge anything that was said in the confession of the dying girl.

Roundman Mike Whalen testified that he had questioned Nettie Howard as to whom it was that had burned her and how it was done. She answered that she did not know.

Nettie Fuller testified that on the Saturday morning that Nettie Howard was burned Thompson leaned over Nettie and said: "Can anyone be forgiven who commits such a crime?"

Nettie said: "I'll suffer all the brimstone and fire in hell, I'll never give you away." She testified that the chimney and burner were lying on the floor near the door leading into the front room, while the lamp was standing on the stand near the head of the bed. She testified that she heard the statement of Nettie Howard to J. L. Hamill, of the Times-Democrat, that Thompson and English Liz had burned her.

This closed the testimony for the morning session, and an adjournment was taken for the noon recess.

A MANGLED VICTIM.

A Bohemian Laborer's Terrible Accident—The Unfortunate Man Dying.

About 8 o'clock yesterday morning, a Bohemian laborer with the unpronounceable name of Anton Kanczy, was run into by a Missouri Pacific passenger train, incoming, near the Thirtieth street crossing, and thrown off the track. He sustained frightful injuries, from which, doubtless, he will die.

Kanczy had been picking up coal from the road bed of the Union Pacific track, and stepped on to the Missouri Pacific track to avoid a freight train which was passing west. Shortly afterward the Missouri Pacific passenger train came thundering along, and the engineer sounded the warning whistle for several consecutive moments. The Bohemian stepped off the track, hearing, as the engineer thought, the signal of danger. He could not have noticed it, however, or else, what is less likely, he did not care to heed, for shortly afterward, just a moment before the train came down upon him he stepped upon the track again, in order to pick up a chunk of coal. He was knocked with terrific force down the embankment, where he was afterwards found by some fellow laborers. Removed to the St. Joseph hospital, he was discovered to have sustained injuries of so complex and dangerous a character that recovery is well nigh impossible. His left forearm was badly broken, right shoulder dislocated, and collar bone fractured, while his skull was fractured on the crown of the cranium. In addition to these injuries, and a compound comminuted fracture of the right leg, serious internal injuries have ensued, which dangerously complicate the situation.

It is believed by Dr. Ayres, the physician attending, that the sufferer can only live a few hours longer, at the most.

Anton Kanczy is a man about 35 years of age. He arrived in this country but a few weeks ago, with his wife and two children, and gained employment as a track hand on the Union Pacific railroad.

In event of the victim's death, Coroner Drexel will at once hold an inquest to examine the question of the responsibility of the engineer of the Missouri Pacific train, for the accident.

It is generally believed that no blame can be attached to him under the circumstances as so far developed.

Note—At 8 o'clock yesterday evening the unfortunate man died at the St. Joseph's hospital. His remains will be taken, and properly cared for. On Friday morning Coroner Drexel will, with a jury of inquest, inquire into the circumstances of the accident. The examination is postponed until Friday to enable the coroner and jury to hear the testimony of the engineer and fireman of the train that occasioned the injuries, which cannot be done until that day, they having gone out with the train yesterday.

Internal Revenue Collections. "How are the internal revenue collections this year compared with those of last?" asked a reporter of a member of the clerical force of that office.

"Largely increased," he replied turning over his books. "For instance, this month of February shows the total collections from all sources to be over $132,000; those of February, last year, were a trifle over $92,000. This ratio of increase will be very nearly maintained during the entire year."

"Is this increase particularly noticeable on any one item?"

"Yes, on liquor stamps sold. You will observe that last February, for example, the revenue from the sale of spirits amounted to $83,319.30, while this year for a corresponding period, the sum was $122,000. To what is this large increase attributable? Very largely to the fact that since last February, the Nebraska City distillery has started up, thus affording a large additional revenue from this source."

"It is quite interesting to note that the collections on tobacco have fallen off considerably this year. Why this is I don't know. Of course, it shows that the sale of tobacco within this district, (Nebraska and Dakota), is decreasing."

"No, I do not apprehend that the new law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors will materially decrease the sale of that article, or our collections thereon. It is pretty certain that if boys want tobacco they will find some method of evading the law to obtain it."

The board of inquiry is still in session at the headquarters.

Cool Taylor is confined to his residence by illness.

Mayor A. T. Smith, who has for some time past filled with honor the position of Rifle instructor at this post, has been detailed to take command of Fort Washakie, Idaho, Wyoming. The formal order, appointing a successor will probably be issued the latter part of this month.

No decisive steps have been taken as yet toward the removal of the rifle range from Fort Omaha, although in all probability the change will be made to Fort Sidney.

Yesterday was payday at the Fort and a large sum of money was disbursed. The joyful event occurs but once in two months. About $12,000 is the sum required to cover the wages of the privates. Including the salaries of officers, the entire salary list for the month expenses showing of about $20,000 a month.

Captain King who is to take charge this year, as formerly, of the construction of railroads in Yellowstone Park, has asked congress for an appropriation of $150,000 for that work during the coming summer months. He will not leave for the scene of his labors until May.

The Bishop Clarkson Memorial Service.

The three Episcopal parishes joined Tuesday in the celebration of the holy communion at Trinity cathedral, it being the anniversary of Bishop Clarkson's death. Flowers had been tastefully arranged on the altar and prayer desk.

Dean Millsap was assisted in the service by Rev. John Williams of St. Barnabas and Rev. James Paterson of St. Marks. The two hymns chosen by the late bishop to be sung at his funeral, "O Paradise" and "Jerusalem the Golden," were sung most effectively by the choir, the congregation joining. There was no address; when the dean stopped in the prayer for a moment he said the words "All bless Thy holy name for all Thy servants departed this life in Thy faith and fear," undoubtedly many a prayer went up asking for grace to follow his good example. After the service the flowers were placed on the bishop's grave, which is under the window of the south transept.

FRIGHTFUL EXPLOSION.

ONE MAN BLOWN TO ATOMS, ANOTHER KILLED, AND NITRO-GLYCERINE WORKS UTTERLY DESTROYED.

BRADFORD, Pa., March 11.—The heaviest nitro-glycerine explosion ever known in the oil country, wherein nearly 6,000 pounds of the dread annihilator were touched off, occurred yesterday noon at Howard Junction, three miles north of Bradford. There are located the factory, magazine, and other buildings of the Rock Glycerine Manufacturing Company, a son, H. V. Pratt, an employee, and W. H. Herrington, one of the proprietors, were at work in the building. The latter had recently purchased an interest in the firm and was just learning the business. How the accident occurred will never be known, but observers at Custer City, about half a mile away, state that two simultaneous flashes were followed by a deafening report and white smoke, and large boulders and quantities of debris were thrown high in the air.

Rushing down to the scene, they found that the destruction had been appalling and complete. Where the factory and magazine stood was a large circular hole ten feet deep, while at the place where the magazine was located the hole twenty-five feet in depth and thirty to forty feet in diameter was scooped out of the ground as neatly as if it had been the work of a professional excavator.

On the bushes and trees for many rods around were found fragmentary particles of flesh and splatters of blood. These were all that was left of the mortal remains of young Herrington. He was a man weighing nearly 200, and altogether, less than three pounds of his body could be picked up.

It was supposed that a similar fate had overtaken Pratt, but a corpse was found where he had been blown in the underbrush at a distance of 200 feet. Remarkable to state, while every bone in his body was broken by the great force of the concussion, his skin was intact.

Of the factory and other buildings, the largest pieces that were found were no larger than a lead pencil. They were literally annihilated. The explosion was plainly heard in all parts of Bradford and houses were shaken as from an earthquake. Herrington formerly resided at Springfield, Crawford county, where his parents live. Pratt came here from Kennedy, N. Y.

The company's loss will exceed $50,000. They will immediately rebuild.

A portion of one of Herrington's arms was found 1,000 feet away lodged in a tree. Houses were shattered and window-panes broken in Bradford and surrounding towns. Trees were uprooted and all-rigs in the vicinity were leveled to the ground.

Population of China.

The vexed question of the extent of the population of China seems to have been pretty definitely settled by Sir Richard Temple, the eminent English geographer and scholar, in a lecture recently delivered by him before the Statistical society of London. The number last published by the government was about 350,000,000, but the inaccuracy of its censuses is shown by its constant variance in its reports, its previous census being no less than 455,000,000. In determining his results Sir Richard Temple applied the census methods used in India, which have been very accurate, and which he justified because the area of the two countries is just about the same, India and China proper each having about 1,500,000 square miles, while both countries are under similar physical, technical, climatic and geographical conditions, and there is the same tendency to multiply in each.

The entire Chinese Empire contains nearly 4,500,000 square miles, of which China proper (that is, excluding the central plateau, which is comparatively barren and sparsely populated) has one-third, supporting an immense population. The average of population in India is 184 to the square mile, the area being 1,337,450 square miles and the population 253,941,369. Applying this average to China proper, the population would be 282,191,600. The most densely populated of the eighteen provinces is that of the Fochih, which contains the two great cities of Peking and Tien-Tsin, and which has 18,200,000 souls. Estimating the population of the central plateau at 15,000,000 and adding to it the 282,000,000 of China proper, the lecturer set down the entire population at 297,000,000. In round numbers, therefore, the Celestials probably number about 300,000,000, or 400,000,000 less than the Chinese official claim. A specially interesting feature of these statistics is their corroboration of certain impressions which have always been held regarding the vastness of the Chinese Empire. It has always been accepted without question that China was the largest empire in the world so far as population was concerned, whereas its estimates are in any way correct, the reputation of that empire very little exceeds that of the British Empire, though far greater than that of France and her colonies; while the equally prevalent impression that the Buddhists far outnumber the Christians in the population of the world is equally incorrect.

As a matter of interest in this connection it may be stated that the British Empire numbers about 250,000,000, of which 214,000,577 belong to her colonies, while France with her colonies, can muster only 43,502,493, of which 5,890,445 belong to her colonies. How much she will add to this number after she gets through with her present war with the 300 million Celestials remains to be seen.

A WASHINGTON HOME.

Residence of Hon. S. S. Cox, on Dupont Circle.

No. 1, Dupont circle, writes a Washington correspondent to the Toronto Mail, is a pretty bison of a house owned by the Hon. Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Cox, of New York. Everybody knows "Sunset" Cox, or "Sunshine," to which his political friends say the nickname must now be changed, since the democratic curtain is about to ring up. He is the wit of the house and has reigned with increasing power since 1897. Mr. Cox is the well-known author of many well-known books, is a constant contributor to magazines, and makes racy speeches in the house on the "stump," and "after dinner." His books are "Why We Laugh," "Sunbeams," "Arcadia and Orient," "The Buckeye Abroad," "A Search for Winter Sunbeams in the Riviera, Corsica, Algiers and Spain." There is also a brochure on "Free Trade," and endless volumes of "Speeches in Congress," and all have the distinctive mark of the author's genius of wit, keen knowledge of human nature, and that rare dramatic knack of bringing the dilettante reader to the reader's presence and comprehension. For the rest, Mr. Cox commands public life as an editor, as he is an Ohio man, and what further that is complimentary can be said of a man who is a gentleman. Mr. Cox is short of stature, slight of frame, dressed with great care, and is swift and nervous in his movements. All human capability he will take a high place in Mr. Cleveland's government.

But I commenced to tell about the house. It is Queen Anne, with a round tower on the corner, a romantic portico, and numerous great and small windows of stained glass that throw lovely tints of light in the rooms. The facade is of green granite, and the interior is of mahogany, which makes it look extremely old and altogether unique. As you enter its exquisite portals there is a small reception room on the left. The walls of this room are colored Pompeian red, which makes a sympathetic background for a few water colors. The Vermilion Towers of the Alhambra, the Alhambra, and the yellow stucco walls, which is the prevailing color through the castle in the "Court of Lions" in the Alhambra, being the prettiest. A marble view by Eliseo occupies one wall, and the floor of the Alhambra portico hangs over a small writing-drawing room. In the corner of the window is an old chair of English oak, covered with Spanish Cordova leather. In another recess is a quaint old chair from the house of representatives that was saved from the flames when the capitol was burned in 1814. The ceiling is tinted in aerial blue, and birds of bright plumage, gay butterflies, and swallows are winging their flight about the room. It is a pretty color, and gives a suggestion that anyone can utilize. The birds and butterflies are cut from cards and pasted on the ceiling. They could, of course, be painted. We cross the hall to enter the drawing-room, which is an oblong room with the door at one side, and at the end it opens into the reading room. This exquisite home is a sovereign home, almost, as Mr. Cox keeps the home in New York City always open. Its ornaments and decorations comprise many of the articles they have gathered on their many and extensive tours in Europe and Asia.

Mr. Cox has accompanied her husband in all his varied travels abroad, and she is a soft, gray-haired peacock, and on the polished floor are two magnificent rugs; the door-drawn windows are hung with curtains of embroidered linen and Roman striped drapery. The furniture is upholstered in blue velvet brocade, and about pictures and arm-chairs are hung embroidered from Constantinople. The mantels are covered in wood and inlaid with Minton tiles. There are cabinets under the shelf and at the sides, which are filled with curiosities from abroad, a tea-bottle from Beppio, a saucer from Holland decorated with postage stamps, Egyptian work, cheroots and sword canes from an Arab bazaar in Damascus, card-holders in Russian porphyry. One mantle is draped in Russian lace, in which is woven a glided water scene, an almost prophetic reflection, since that fact is the emblem of democratic rejoicing. A Jerusalem shell, mounted on ruby plush, is a pretty device to ornament a small table. Some of the pictures are a pastel from the Dusseldorf gallery, in New York, by Fitch; "The Evening Star," "Roses," by Pauline Girardin; a picture of "St. John," a copy of Murillo from Madrid; "The Slipper Dance," by Gussman, Spanish artist; and a beautiful marble is one of Powers' first "Proserpine," differing from the latter model that has a wreath of acanthus leaves about the shoulder. The glory of the dining-room is the chimney-piece which is a model in clay of the old-time Dutch oven which was used in this country in its early years. The door in this instance is a mirror; it is there to admire and love more and more every day. A picture of Mt. Etna throws a strange blending of the lurid light of the volcano fires and the weird light of the moon. A small cabinet in this room has a collection of many things in it. A tiny black tea-bottle of Irish bog oak, a small flagon from Constantinople, pipes from Damascus, Norwegian spoons with turned silver handles, Dresden china cups, porcelain from Broussa, the ancient capital of Asia Minor; coffee cups from the Dead sea region; egg-shell china from the Italian cities; Paris, daggert from Damascus; silver filigree from China, and a gold watch-bow with bronze mounting from England. Over the landing of the Queen Anne stairway is a full-sized copy of Murillo's Madonna, draped in wine-colored velvet. Mr. Cox's study is the perfection of comfort and beauty. It is full of art treasures, books and easy chairs. His favorite article of vertu is a bronze in high relief of Don Quixote, furnishing his sword in one hand and holding a book in the other, with his ugly mouth open, crying aloud. This piece is the special favorite of Mr. Cox.
